Choosing how to get paid

When deciding how to distribute wages, employers can choose how they'll pay you (payment method) and how often you'll get paid (payment schedule).

Common payment methods are direct deposit, paper check, cash, or prepaid card. Common payment schedules – also called pay periods – range from weekly to monthly. Understanding the similarities and differences of these methods and pay periods can help you manage your wages and budget your money.

Instructions

1. Compare and contrast different methods and pay periods for getting paid.
2. Write questions or thoughts you may have about each method and pay period.
3. Participate in a poll where you choose your preferred payment method and pay period, both now and when you're an adult. Discuss your choices with classmates.
